At St. Gregorios Teacher Training College in Meenangadi, the teaching-learning process is carefully designed and carried out to ensure that students develop their creativity, inventiveness, critical thinking, empathy, and other life skills. Creativity among student teachers is facilitated by assisting them in creating lesson plans that incorporate various teaching strategies and models, providing training for efficient assessment procedures during internships, organising exhibitions, engaging in literary activities, preparing college magazines, starting blogs, and updating them. The institution creates innovative works, innovative teaching, prepares support materials, and produces, scripts, and edits movies as part of its efforts to foster innovation. Through numerous activities such as Thought for the Day program, reflective practices, effective teaching methods, and problem solving exercises, student teachers' intellectual and thinking abilities, critical thinking capacity, problem solving ability, and metacognitive thinking are maximised.

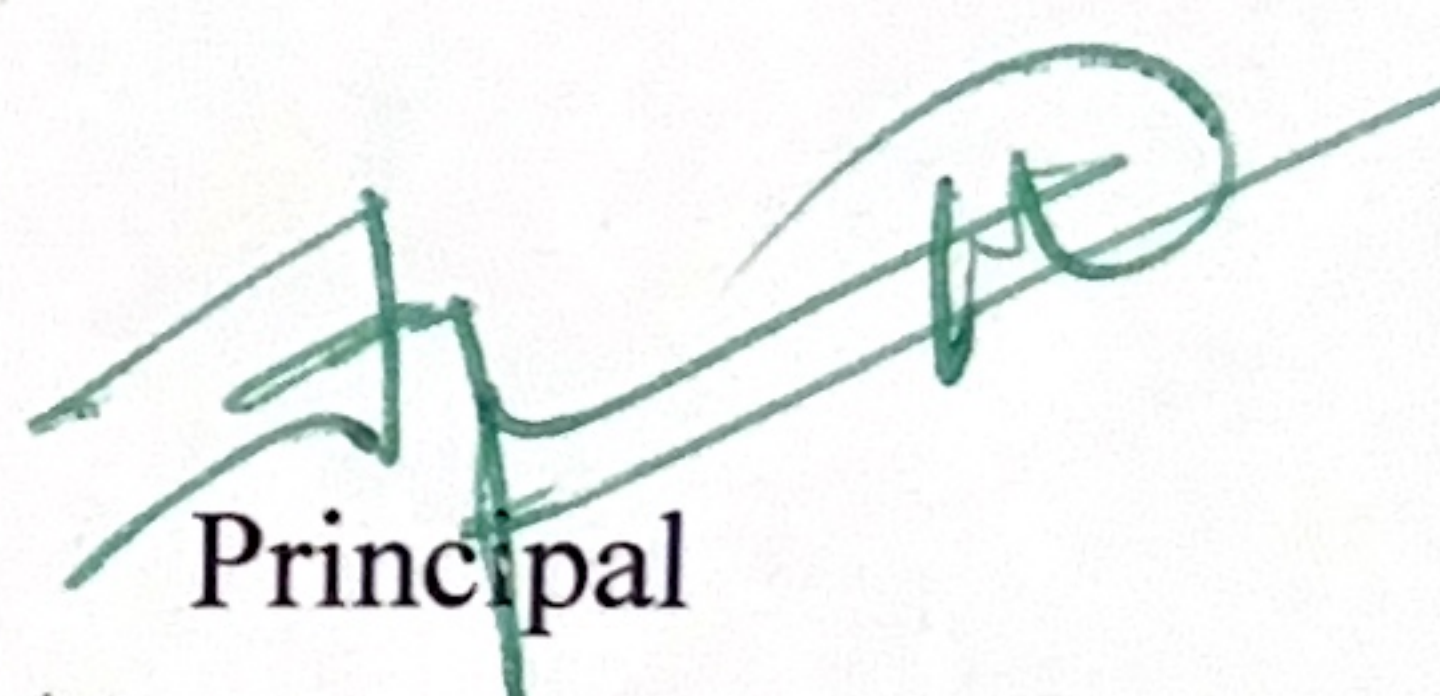

During the morning assembly, students participate in the Thought for the Day program where they critically assess a topic and share their opinions on the matter covered. Students also complete reading and reflection on material, which involves them critically analysing a book related to their course and sparking their critical thinking process. Metacognition is aided by peer review, reflective activities, and criticism classes. Students are required to plan seminars, competitions, events, and all other duties that are provided, which helps them become more adept at solving problems and multitasking. Throughout their school internship, student teachers take on the role of mentors, becoming involved in the issues that children encounter, supporting them through difficult times, and attending PTA meetings, all of which foster empathy for the underprivileged, ill, impoverished, and uneducated working-class masses whose children these student teachers are teaching. participate in midday food service to students, which enables them to comprehend the suffering of the average person. Student instructors are more able to comprehend the concerns and challenges that ordinary people encounter because of their interactions with other students, teachers, parents, and even their peer group. They consider methods of resolving these issues on their own, through the use of psychological techniques, or by consulting with specialists. In addition, the college organises events such as Village Adoption, Visits to Old Age Homes and Orphanages, Community Living Camps, and so forth, which support the development of interpersonal relationships, decision-making abilities, and communication skills in the student teachers and enable them to confidently confront challenges in life. College celebrations of national holidays, festivals, and other cultural events assist students remember the nation's rich cultural legacy and develop into better educators who will influence future generations of people.
